MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 18.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING.—On Saturday last, 9th inst., Mr. W. F. Bodine, in company with his cousin, Miss Ada Mitchell, left here in a buggy to visit his mother at Hartford, near Nokesville. On his arrival at Broad Run bridge, the ford at which he expected to cross, he found the stream swollen beyond his expectations by the recent rains and melting of snow, but still did not consider it past fording. After contemplating the best landing on the opposite bank, he drove in, and when near the middle of the stream the horse lost his footing in consequence of the rapid current, and was swept, together with the buggy and its occupants, rapidly down the stream to a distance of an hundred yards, Mr. Bodine all the while using his utmost strength to urge the horse to the south bank, and at the same time cautioning the young lady to remain calm and cling to him, which she did, although at one time she was submerged above her waist. Finally the horse, having gained a footing and came to a stand while the buggy was swept around and in such a place that it was impossible to land. Mr. B. then jumped out into the water, which was above his waist, and obtaining a rail from a bridge over which he let Miss Mitchell safely, though shivering with cold and fright, to the bank, after which he succeeded in getting his horse and buggy ashore and proceeded on their journey, congratulating themselves upon their escape from a watery grave.—Manassas Gazette.
